Even with great strides in the battle worldwide against several childhood diseases, the fact is that children across the globe continue to struggle with life-threatening illnesses, with more than 7 million preschool-aged children dying every year. Pediatric health care professionals in resource-rich countries are stepping up to this challenge, spending time, energy, and money in combating the illnesses of global child health.

To be effective globally, a pediatric health care practitioner must gain knowledge and skills necessary to serve across cultural and national boundaries. And so we offer the American Academy of Pediatrics Textbook of Global Child Health.
